

Editorial Note

The editorial board is presenting to you the second edition of the peer-reviewed Journal of Sustainable Development and Environmental Protection. This edition subscribes to the premise that sustainable development and environmental protection paradigms are promising, evolving and developing.

It therefore, refuses to identify itself with range of fields or disciplines but conforms to the underlying concepts of sustainable development and environmental protection that embraces integrating approaches in the development of its paradigm.

This is because all fields and disciplines are expected to contribute to the societal needs of environmental sustainability and protection through targeted and solution driven engendered research analysis that are expected to promote sustainable development policy formulation and implementation in our society.

This may suggest why day to day practices have shown that sustainable development and environmental protection research scope and analysis are at most times rooted mostly from different disciplines and fields. The papers in this volume of Journal of Sustainable Development and Environmental Protection also follow this notable trend.

Thereby, research papers in this edition were strategically selected from varied fields and disciplines of sustainable development and environmental protection. The fields of study selected include food security, environmental management, environmental business and conflict resolution.

The selected papers in these disciplines still conforms to the concepts of sustainable development and environmental protection by having a string of environmental conservation and preservation tying then together for the total wellbeing of man and the society.

We, thereby encourage our audience to make time out for all the articles. Since, the research articles in this volume with their specialized fields and undertone were simply written with little specialized terminologies to encourage wide readership.

The editorial board also welcomes comments, suggestions and feedbacks from our audience. We are of the opinion that your feedbacks will encourage and enable us to improve the quality of the journal.

Kind regards,

S. Adedeji Daramola (PhD)
EDITOR-IN-CHIEF